Hailed by New Jersey Monthly Magazine as New Jersey's Most Conservative Legislator (earning further kudos for among the best sense of humor) Assemblyman Michael Patrick Carroll has resided in Morris County for almost half a century. Noted for his vehement opposition to tax increases, government growth, and encroachments on liberty, defeated an effort to increase the gas tax, and is New Jersey's leading opponent of racial and ethnic quotas. A strong advocate of political education, he often appears at Junior State, and frequently speaks on politics and government to student groups. Married to the former Sharon Anderson, with whom he has six children, he lives in Morris Township, where he practices law.
