Hailed by New Jersey Monthly Magazine as New Jersey's Most Conservative Legislator (earning further kudos for among the best sense of humor) Assemblyman Michael Patrick Carroll has resided in Morris County for almost half a century. First elected in 1995, he ranks 7th in seniority among Republicans seeking reelection. Noted for his vehement opposition to tax increases, government growth, and encroachments on liberty, he opposed 13 of 14 budgets, defeated an effort to increase the gas tax, and is New Jersey's leading opponent of racial and ethnic quotas. One of the Legislature's foremost students of history, he serves on the Abraham Lincoln Bicentennial Commission. A prolific writer and speaker, he serves as the lead Republican columnist on PolitickerNJ.com, authors a political blog, and appears regularly in the Daily Record and on WMTR, and guested on Sean Hannity, Neil Cavuto, The Today Show, Curtis and Kuby, and many other public affairs programs. A strong advocate of political education, he often appears at Junior State, and frequently speaks on politics and government to student groups. Married to the former Sharon Anderson, with whom he has six children, he lives in Morris Township, where he practices law.
